RECLAIMING INTERNATIONAL WORKING WOMEN’S DAY
Women in Solidarity : Strikes in the Red Clyde and Belfast-1919

1919 represented a seminal year for the labour movement beginning with coordinated strike action across industries in Scotland, Ireland and internationally. In Glasgow the events of 1919, the general strike, particularly the riot that took place on 31 January which became known as ‘Bloody Friday’ or ‘the battle of George Square’ are part of Glasgow’s historical DNA. Following Bloody Friday Lenin referred to Glasgow as “the Petrograd of the West”. Often under-examined is the role of women as workers and as political activists alongside young people and children in participating in the general strike and the role that the community had played in establishing an infrastructure that brought another layer to the workers’ organisation during that strike and beyond. Red Clyde was born in 1919, but its legacy is not only of industrial militancy, but a labour movement that extended to the whole working class community including women and the unemployed.

Jennifer McCarey is chair of Glasgow Trades Council. The trades council, along with the Joint Shop Stewards Committee, and the Scottish TUC, were the three organisations that called for the General Strike of 1919. She is a full-time Official with Unison

The meeting will be chaired by Dr Jenny Farrell (CPI)

Bread and Roses- James Oppenheim

As we come marching, marching, in the beauty of the day,
A million darkened kitchens, a thousand mill-lofts gray
Are touched with all the radiance that a sudden sun discloses,
For the people hear us singing, “Bread and roses, bread & roses.”

As we come marching, marching, we battle, too, for men—
For they are women’s children and we mother them again.
Our lives shall not be sweated from birth until life closes—
Hearts starve as well as bodies: Give us bread, but give us roses!

As we come marching, marching, unnumbered women dead
Go crying through our singing their ancient song of Bread;
Small art and love and beauty their drudging spirits knew—
Yes, bread we fight for—but we fight for roses too.

As we come marching, marching, we bring the Greater Days—
The rising of the women means the rising of the race—
No more the drudge and idler—ten that toil where one re-

poses—
But sharing of life’s glories: Bread and roses, bread and roses!
CLARA Zetkin was a Marxist and revolutionary whose lifetime spanned from 1857 to 1933. During that time she was a founding figure of the International Socialist Women’s Movement and a member of the communist and labour movement. In Copenhagen in 1910 she seconded the motion to establish a day for working women, becoming popularly known as International Women’s Day. Clara was an anti-war activist and during the First World War she was imprisoned in Germany for her opposition to the imperialist war. Clara Zetkin famously said “All the many brands of suppression, racism, sexism, heterosexism, ageism, classism – are historical; they have not been always with us. It was not ever thus. And it’s not going to be this way, come the revolution.” A woman of vision who inspires other women to this day.

Though we accept that the popularised version of “IWD” is used the world over, in recent years the Communist Party of Ireland has reverted to the original title that Clara Zetkin used 110 years ago: International Working Women’s Day, an acknowledgment of the fact that this is a day for working class women, whether in paid work or unpaid work. Not to be high-jacked by the over privileged classes. This is a historical topic but we also want you to join us in a discussion about contemporary politics; about women in Ireland and internationally, gains, losses and the future.

Speaker: Sandra Trotter will talk about Clara Zetkin our heritage. Sandra was born in 1973 in Rüdersdorf, a small town in the German Democratic Republic, she attended the Clara Zetkin nursery School. Aged 17 she moved to the then unified (or annexed) city of Berlin and became active in the anti-fascist movement. In 1999 aged 25 she came to Scotland and is now employed in social care and mental health care. She joined Unite and the Communist Party of Britain. She is currently vice chair of the Scottish Committee of the CPB, chair of Dumfries and District Trade Union Council and branch secretary of the Dumfries and District Unite branch”
